

Economics

Contributed by Administrator
Sunday, 01 March 2009
Last Updated Monday, 02 March 2009

Economics has long enjoyed popularity as unrelenting, though certainly not equal in this regard such as marketing. It would seem that the only way to close minds. I mean, everywhere one goes, for example, inflation fell to 3%, unemployment is increasing dramatically, a GDP of $ 300 per person. The fact is that studying in this direction does not miss a typical mathematical objects, such as econometrics and statistics. In fact, the economics are included in the social sciences, so humani[ci also find something for everyone.

Students gain knowledge of economics among others. with micro-and macroeconomics, finance, history of economic thought, law, management, and even so, it would seem completely unrelated areas, such as sustainable development, psychology or transport. It is at this point to note, that depending on the school subjects are imposed "from above" or a student, in addition to compulsory courses, he may choose those that interest him.

And what's a graduate of this course? Well, their employment opportunities are vast - from small companies through to international corporations, public institutions, so the offices, ministries and NGOs. Much of the Master of Economics decided to stay in and deal with scientific or educational work.

So if you want to know the mechanisms that govern the economies, and understand what is in the media do not hesitate to either time. But remember that the importance of economic studies have adequate teaching facilities and the possibility of putting knowledge into practice. So think over the choice of university. Failure to do so to study the theory, which is sometimes not similar to reality, do not bring you any satisfaction, and benefits